

Social Psychology (SOCPSY)

Module 2: The Social Self

Self-Presentation on Campus

Lesson Notes

KMVTECHUG

Version: 2026

Self-Presentation

Self-presentation is how we try to control the impression others form of us. It is common in interviews, first days in class, and on social media. It is not always false. People often present sides of themselves that are real but selective.

The Self on a Ugandan Campus

Campus life often mixes family expectations, peer comparison, and performance pressure. Students may present a confident face in class while feeling doubt privately. Noticing this gap can reduce shame and support healthier study choices.

Managing Self-Discrepancy

Useful steps include setting realistic next steps toward the ideal self, checking whether ought standards are fair or only external pressure, and using specific feedback such as marks or practice results instead of global self-labels.

Reflect: Describe one way you present yourself differently in class compared with how you feel in private.

Closing

Module 2 covered self-concept, the three selves, self-esteem, and self-presentation. Module 3 turns to social perception.